

the cloud, the cactus

the cloud, the cactus

The cloud thunders powerless secrets—
thrusting lightning arms
stretching for the cactus—
and sheds tears on its flower unreached.

The cactus pierces the rainy sheet—
biting rocky sand,
inhaling desert dust—
to scorn and shed the damp affection.

The cloud thunders powerless secrets—

thrusting lightning arms

stretching for the cactus—

and sheds tears on its flower unreached.

The cactus pierces the rainy sheet—

biting rocky sand,

inhaling desert dust—

to scorn and shed the damp affection.

Poem Stephen Muratore
© 2008