

breath

two ships set out from remotest shores, white lungs billowing,
ears to all noises deaf.

only the land-locked would ask for more to explain how they came to the self-same course, for their sails inhaled the same sky-blown breath.

